

Calamia hits back

03/11/2013 - Shanghai

Up until the running of the endurance race, the Chinese weekend had not been kind to Mauro Calamia. The Swiss Team driver is, without a doubt, one of the fastest and most spectacular in the series but was, once again, the victim of bad luck.

In the longer event, when he had no technical problems, Calamia mounted a comeback from twelfth to fourth. He only missed out on the podium when Mac overtook him on the very last curve.

“My start was decent enough but I was held up by two cars that collided just ahead of me. Unfortunately, I slipped a couple of places and then slowly climbed the field until it was time to pit. I made up a lot of ground and my lap times matched those set by the leaders. I was eventually caught by Mac as it was hard defending what I had. Still, fourth is a good result to take home after a difficult weekend”
